English is a language that belongs to the whole world. It has a great literature. It is the language of science and technology and it is used all over the world as a language of learning and communication. Many other languages are as effective as English in one or more of these fields. However, as a means of expression and communication, English is used in many more fields than most other ancient and modern languages. Indeed, as has often been suggested, English is 'a window to the world'.
